Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The physical and psychological health of the subjects was assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly improved the subjects' physical health, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and their psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The walking program also significantly improved the subjects' quality of life, as measured by the SF-36. The walking program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects. The results of this study suggest that a supervised walking program can be an effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

A 1997 study by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) found that the average person in the United States spends about 10 percent of their time in vehicles, which is a significant portion of their daily lives. This time is spent in a variety of vehicles, including cars, trucks, and buses, and in a variety of environments, including urban, suburban, and rural areas. The study also found that the average person in the United States spends about 10 percent of their time in vehicles, which is a significant portion of their daily lives. This time is spent in a variety of vehicles, including cars, trucks, and buses, and in a variety of environments, including urban, suburban, and rural areas.

State and local health departments are urged to be alert for the possibility of a smallpox outbreak, and to be prepared to handle such a situation.
